- eventful day
- upturned
- unconsciously
- white darkness

2) The author refers to two contrasting emotions- what are they?

Ans: The author refers to two contrasting emotions- feeling dumb and feeling expectant.

3) What does the author compare herself to?

Ans: The author compares herself to a ship that is trying to find its way towards the shore using a plummet and sounding line through a dense white fog. She compares her disability to the white darkness of the fog.

4) What did young Helen's teacher do when they first met?

Ans: When they first met, young Helen's teacher held Helen's hand and held her close in her arms lovingly.

5) What is the difference between finger play, spelling a word mechanically and writing a meaningful word?

Ans: A finger play means learning to spell using fingers. Hand movements are coordinated with words to engage and sustain children's interest. Finger plays can be in the form of songs or chants. Spelling a word mechanically means learning the words using touch in the beginning. It is just imitation. Writing a meaningful words means writing a word knowingly by understanding its meaning properly.

6) What is the difference between wordless sensation and thought?

Ans: Thought occurs in brain while sensation occurs at different organs. Thoughts is an idea or opinion coming in mind while sensation is a physical feeling when something comes in contact with body. Thought is expressed through words while sensation is to be felt without using words.

7) What were the barriers? How could they be swept away?

Ans: The main barriers in the process of Helen's education were her lifelong blindness and deafness. When Helen understood that everything carried some name she wanted to know names and meanings of everything but she couldn't even speak. So it was difficult for her to express what she wanted to know. But she decided to sweep away these barriers with the help of her teacher, Anne Sullivan and her strong desire of learning.

8) Why did young Helen feel repentance and sorrow?

Ans: Helen Keller's thought process was changed after knowing the word water. She realized that her teacher wanted to tell her meaning of 'doll'. Now she was experiencing all the feelings, emotions, tenderness and love so, she felt sorrow and repentance for her unfair act of throwing the doll.

Solo piano performance- nervous- scared- took a deep breath- performed- received a loud applause- happy- felt confident.

I had performed a solo piano recital for the school annual day function. I was very nervous and scared as this was the first time I was playing for an audience. I was sweating profusely and my hands were very sweaty. I took my place at the piano and looked at the audience. I took a deep breath and closed my eyes and began playing. As soon as I heard the notes it was only me and the piano and before I knew I was done playing my piece. There was a loud applause from the audience and I stood and took a bow. Now I feel very confident about performing in front of a crowd.
