Monsieur Loisel said this to Mathilde

The day of the party drew near, and Madame Loisel seemed sad, restless, anxious, though her dress was ready. One evening her husband said to her, "What's the matter? You've been acting strange these last three days." She replied: "I'm upset that I have no jewels, not a single stone to wear. I would rather not go to the party." "You could wear flowers," he said, "They are very fashionable at this time of year." She was not convinced.

The next day she went to her friend's house and told her of her distress. Madame Forestier went to her mirrored wardrobe, took out a large box, brought it back, opened it, and said to Madame Loisel: "Choose, my dear." First Mathilde saw some bracelets, then a pearl necklace. She tried on the jewellery in the mirror. She kept asking, "You have nothing else?"

"Why, yes. But I don't know what you like." Suddenly she discovered, in a black satin box, a superb diamond necklace, and her heart began to beat with uncontrolled desire. Her hands trembled as she took it. She fastened it around her neck and stood lost in ecstasy as she looked at herself. Then she asked anxiously, hesitating, "Would you lend me this, just this?" "Why, yes, of course." She threw her arms around her friend's neck, rapturously, then fled with her treasure.

Who said To Whom

They looked in the folds of her dress, in the folds of her cloak, in her pockets, everywhere. But they could not find it. "Are you sure you still had it on when you left the hall?" he asked. "Yes. I touched it in the hall at the Ministry." "But if you had lost it in the street we would have heard it fall. It must be in the cab." "Yes. That's probably it. Did you take his number?" "No." They stared at each other, stunned. At last Loisel put his clothes on again. "I'm going back," he said, "Over the whole route we walked, and see if I can find it." He left. She remained in her ball dress all night, her mind blank. Her husband returned at about seven o'clock. He had found nothing. He went to the police, to the newspapers to offer a reward, to the cab companies, everywhere the tiniest glimmer of hope led him. She waited all day, in despair at this frightful disaster.
